BRIT MILAH Judaism Practices

Rites of passage: Ceremonies that mark important transitional periods in a person's life, such as birth, puberty, marriage, having children, and death

Brit Milah: ceremony of male circumcision; the removal of the foreskin for religious reasons

What happens

- Occurs eight days after birth
- Mohel preforms the procedure
- A close friend/relative places the baby on an empty chair that symbolises the presence of the prophet Elijah.
- The mohel picks up the baby and places him on the knee of the sandek (companion of the child, usually the grandfather)
- The father says a blessing: "Bless are you Lord our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his mitzvot and commanded us to enter my son into the covenant with Abraham".
- A blessing is said over wine and the baby is formally named.

In the Tanakh it says...

'You shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin, and that shall be assign of the covenant between Me and you".

In the Tanakh it says...

'Every male among you shall be circumcised at the age of eight days.'

In the Tanakh it says...

"As for you, you must keep my covenant, you and your descendants after you".

In the Tanakh it says...

"Any male among you who is uncircumcised shall be cut off from his people; he has broken my covenant"

Jews believe God gave Abraham a direct instruction that they should circumcise all male children.

Orthodox and Reform interpret this as.... If they do not circumcise their children they will be excluded from the covenant and will not be able to receive God's promises.
